in about half an hour the yawl boat was dashed on the beach, and was found to contain a man clinging to one of the seats.

As soon as he was able to speak he said that he was one of the immigrants, and had got into the boat with about 70 others, but was unable to open the door almost immediately, and he alone managed to cling to it as it was hurled over and over toward the shore.

This image shows a blank, aged, cream-colored page, likely an endpaper or flyleaf of a book. The paper has a slightly textured appearance with some minor creases and discoloration, characteristic of old paper. The left edge of the page is bound, and the overall tone is a warm, off-white or light beige.
